Mr. Keel's notes show a president who, in the hope of getting more U.S. hostages freed from Lebanon, helped frame an administration statement that omitted that goal and emphasized instead the "international foreign interests" and "hope for moderate government" in Iran.

The administration stuck to this line in the weeks that followed, as the Iran-contra affair engulfed the Reagan presidency.

WORLD BRIEFS

WASHINGTON (AP) - Caspar W. Weinberger, the secretary of defense, said Sunday that the United States will not hargein away U.S. controlled nuclear warheads in West Germany in seeking an arms control agreement with the Soviet Union.

Interviewed on television, Mr. Weinberger said he regards the latest arms control offer by the Soviet leader, Mikhail S. Gorbachev, as a significant step toward a possible agreement, but he is still waiting to see all of the conditions. He said that for the United States to agree to withdraw those warheads would violate a principle that the superpowers will not bargain away agreements they have made with other countries.

It not only violates that, but the German Pershings are not on the table," he said, alluding to nuclear warheads for West Germany's 72 Pershing IA short-range missiles. He added the Soviet proposal would simplify the problem of how to verify a treaty, which the United States regards as a key point in negotiations.

Lawmakers Still Expect Battle Over Contra Aid

Democrats and Republicans in Congress both said in interviews that they expected the rise in public support after Lieutenant Colonel Oliver L. North's testimony to be of little lasting value to the White House. They said the debate in Congress after the current $100 million appropriation runs out in September would be contentious, with the outcome in doubt.

President Ronald Reagan is expected to ask Congress soon for an 18-month appropriation of $130 million to $140 million, which would carry the aid program for the rebels, known as contras, through the end of his term.

After the first disclosures about the secret diversion to the rebels of profits from the Iran arms sales, Reagan administration officials were so pessimistic about the chances for more aid that they put off submitting the request until fall. Officials had said they feared that disclosures from the Iran-contra hearings could make the outcome just as doubtful. But the hearings have instead served as a highly visible platform for government officials and others to present the case for contra aid.

Mr. Reagan says the hearings have turned the tide. "The American people are waking up," he said

But polls showing modest increases in public support for aid to the contras were generally discounted in Congress.

A New York Times-CBS News Poli taken on Tuesday and Wednesday showed 49 percent of the public opposed to aiding the contras, with 40 percent in favor. In January, the same poll found 60 percent opposed and 28 percent in Public support has "maybe gone up a little, but it's still going to be tough." said Senator Bob Dole of Kansas, the Republican leader, who has supported aid. "You've got to have the votes."

Senator Richard G. Lugar, Republican of Indiana, said the hearings had given the contra policy increased visibility without increase.

Bring Back the Blimp? Some Navies Consider It increased visibility without increasing public confidence. But he said that was a "snapshot for the moment" that could easily change.

He said he believed the administration did not realize how thin its support was in the Senate even last fall, when the $100 million appropriation was approved 53-47. Only a bipartisan agreement on a simultaneous vote on sanctions against South Africa saved the contra bill from a filibuster that could have killed it, he recalled.

The House has also been deeply divided. It initially rejected the $100 million appropriation last year, then approved it 221-209. In March, it voted 230-196 to block further aid to the contras until the administration provided an accounting of the funds spent so far.

While that measure never came to a vote in the Senate, the House Democratic leadership regards the vote as having placed a solid majority of the House on record against the administration's policy.

"We're not sensing any loss" of opposition as a result of the hearings, said Representative David E. Bonior of Michigan, who heads a House leadership task force on the

More Adults Believe Paddling Of School Pupils Is Child Abuse

Corporal punishment of public school pupils, which is legal in 41 of the 50 states, is increasingly opposed by parents, lawmakers, psychologists and educators who say it can be a form of child abuse; The New York Times

The punishment usually involves striking pupils across the posterior, most often with a paddle, or with a heavy belt or a birch switch. Marilyn B. Gootman, a professor of educa-tion at the University of Georgia, said it has little deterrent effect because "the kids who get paddled are the same ones who get pad-dled over and over again."

She said paddling also can have a negative effect on children whose behavior never leads to corporal punishment: "Good' children also worry about getting paddled. Their worrying saps energy from their thinking and learning."

Support for corporal punishment is stron-gest in the rural South and in the Midwest. "I don't know what we'd do without it," said Johnnie Sikes, the school superintendent in Toombs County, Georgia. "The only alterna-tive is to send unruly kids home, and they won't learn anything there."

Irwin A. Hyman, a psychologist at Temple University who heads the National Center for the Study of Corporal Punishment, said paddling contributes to "the acceptance of the idea that violence against children is all Ordinarily this would be an unremarkable thing to say about a president, but Ronald Reagan has been portrayed as a Lid-back, often disengaged manager.

The Tower commission painted just such a picture and went on to fault his high subordinates as well for failing to take up the slack.
The commission found no "smoking gun" or conclusive evidence that Mr. Reagan was aware of aid being sent to the Nicaraguan rebels in violation of the law, or of the diversion of funds from selling arms to Iran.

The congressional investigating commitwhat they have found has not been a smoking gun but a smoking cannon. This cannon shows just how personally and firmly Mr. Reagan set the course the United States followed: He insisted on supporting the Nicaraguan rehels, though Congress banned it. He invisted on selling arms to Iran in return for the release of American hostages, though he had wisely vowed never to bargain with terrorists. Whatever else remains to be discovered, this cannon represents not evidence of a crime but of his leadership, confused and flawed and determined

Domestic and foreign policies essentially have marched where President Reagan wanted them to go for six years. That powerful fact often seems forgotten in light of the current policy disaster. It is also indisputable that he commanded extraordinary loyalty from his subordinates. Even now they speak of him with respect. As for Admiral Poin-dexter and Colonel North, they seemed to have shared the president's goals so zeal-

Before his death this year, he could guide the imaginative colonel and the bureaucratic admiral through the alleys of clandestine operations. When necessary, it seems, Mr. Casey was not above creating intelligence information to fit the policy. Mr. Shultz testified, for example, that contrary to the facts, the CIA told the president at a crucial juncture that Iran had ssened its terrorist activities. The director, the admiral, the colonel and others set off a bombardment of lies and deceptions, touching Congress, their colleagues in the executive branch, the president and even one another. Their conflicting testimonies and destruction of evidence make it impossible to reconstruct events with confidence. But the president has never condenned them outright for these actions.

Would accurate information have altered the president's course? Mr. Shultz told of an early White House meeting to discuss the Iran imitiative, He and Mr. Weinberger opposed the fantastic scheme. According to Mr. Shultz, the president responded that "the American people will never forgive me if I fail to get these hostages out."

Mr. Reagan left no doubt about his goals: He demanded action to free the hostages and support the contras. Whether or not he knew the details, his aides followed his lead and did the rest.

Mideast Peace Talks: Prescription for War?

By Moshe Arens

The writer, a former defense minister of Israel, is now a minister without partfolio. He is a member of the Likud Party.

J al conference on the Middle East with Soviet participation, widely touted as the only avenue to peace between Israel, Jordan and the Palestinians, is an ill-conceived idea. It cannot provide the proper frame-work and the pressure-free atmosphere needed to resolve what is not merely a question of territory and borders but of Israel's very existence. It can only severely harm Isruel and increase Soviet power and prestige in the Middle East, Until recently, there was a consensus in Israel and the United States that the only desirable format for peace negotiations was direct talks between the parties to the conflict. It is not only a reasonable, unimpeachable position but one of particular pertinence in the context of the Arab-Israeli conflict. Direct talks, implying recognition, would remove a main obstacle to peace: Arab refusal to recognize Israel's right to exist. The principle proved itself in the case of Egypt.

Now we are told that Jordan weaker, smaller and more vulnerable to Palestinian and radical threats needs the protection of an international umbrella to enter such talks, and has therefore conditioned its participation on Israel's acquiescence to an international conference, a format first proposed - lest we forget - by

But no matter what promises Jordan has made privately to America and Israel, to suppose that a country that dares not dely radical regimes and Palestinian terrorists on matters of procedure will defy them on matters of bstance is to mack common sense.

It is even more absurd to contend that the Soviet Union, begetter of the international conference idea, would consent to accept a purely ceremonial role and serve as a rubber stamp to decisions made by the parties to the dispute. On the contrary, it would insist on playing an active role - and would not be alone in doing so. Every putative participant, including Amer-ica, has declared that it would present its own ideas for a solution.

They all eachew an "imposed" set-tlement —a rather empty concession, since no such imposition can be forced on Israel at present - but they all assume that conference pressure exerted on Israel to withdraw to the 1949 armistice line would prove irresistible, despite the official opposi-tion to such withdrawal by all of Israel's major political parties.

It is not a baseless assumption.

Israel would be isolated at such a conference. The unanimity among participants for virtually total Israeli withdrawal would be complete. The only difference between the American and Soviet positions is on whether Judea and Semaria should become an independent PLO state or a "Palestinian homeland" federated with Jordan - an ultimately meaningless difference, since there is no way to control who would rule the area once Israel relinquished control. But there is a world of difference between America's right to a role of

It recently sponsored reunification of the PLO on a platform calling for continued terrorism and the disman-tling of Israel. And now, having se-cured Israel's agreement to a Soviet consular mission in Tel Aviv, it refuses to reciprocate by allowing a similar Israeli delegation into the So-viet Union. Clearly, the Soviet Union's changes in style have brought no concomitant changes in substance in its Middle East policies.

We are assured that if the major powers insisted on interfering in bilateral Israel-Jordan negotiations, Israel would be free to walk out. But it is inconceivable that Israel could, with impunity, bolt a conference it has so adamantly pushed for. The momentum of worldwide expectations, the universal hope for a breakdinough and the pressure of public opinion generated by such a confer-ence could not be cavaliarly dismissed: If Israel walked out, it would be branded a rejector of peace.

The rush to an international conference is a classic example of the erosion of will in a democracy in the face of external pressures and promises, and internal impatience and fatigne. COSCOW - "Henry, you are M trying to shut as out of the Middle East, "Andrei Gromyko said to Henry Kissinger as the short lived Geneva peace conference of Well, Andrei, there wall now be a hiatus." Mr. Kissinger responded with uncharacteristic understatement. He and Anwar Sadat of Egypt then set about accomplishing the cucheon that Mr. Gromyko accurately feared.

The hiatus, which lasted nearly 14 years, is now ending as the Russians. forge their way into the Middle East in a big way. In the Middle East, new thinking has involved sending consular officials to Israel as a tiny step toward ream, ing diplomatic relations, coordinating oil production levels with Saudi Arabia, writing off Egypt's military debt at a time when debt is a major arriant. between Cairo and Washington, and chartening Soviet tankers to Kawaii while Washington hesitated. The seductive theme of Soviet pragmatism is playing elsewhere, too Soviet courses to larger and to the arms.

In Latin America, at the Camp David presidential retreat. He assured the Americans that all East-West problems were soluble if both sides would compromise.

That night, after everyone had retired, Mr. Brezhnev sent a surprise request to Mr. Nixon that they meet to discuss the Middle East. He then proposed that a settlement could be arranged to the basis of an end to bellication, poor question about it. Oh yes, absolutely. The Chinese weren't white. But then he made the interesting comment. He said, Now you talk about your allies, speaking of NATO, and the said. You and Fhank the said. You and Fhank the said of the said of the said.

Mexico is now more important in Soviet calculations than Cuba or Nicaragni.

Washington is responding to this new challenge with what looks suspiciously like old thinking. In the Gulf. Soviet political gains are met with a loudly trumpeted but unconvincing U.S. military response, and a return-to Kissingerian language about ex-cluding the Russians from the region. The idea of a ceremonial Middle East peace conference that would open the way for active American mediation has also been revived by Washington. There seems to be an assumption there that the Russians will once again settle for the appearance of diplomatic parity with the United States and stand aside at a moment decided by Washington.

That is almost certainly not the case. Mr. Gorbachev is apparently free of the complexes about parity with the United States that his prodecessors possessed, and will hold out for a conference in which the Soviets will have a substantive role.

In 1973, President Sudat had already pushed the Russians to the side of Middle East diplomacy. Mr. Kissinger could afford to let them a tiny. way back in at the Geneva conference, and then excise them again. When he talked of excluding the Russians, Mr. Kissinger had specific steps in mind to achieve his goal.

The Reagan administration does not. The Soviets have patiently built up a position in the Middle East and the Culf that no longer depends on U.S. tolerance. More active in both Iran and Iraq than Washington can be, comphasizing common interest with conservative Arab states and Israel, Moscow has created a Soviet role that

Go Calmly in the Gulf

Despite the mine damage to the tanker Bridgeton and the ululations from Tehran, Washington does not have to turn injury into disaster. By refraining from retaliatory action, the administration can ensure that the avatollahs are not diverted from contemplating their present predicament and the desirability of a cease-fire. Nor should one mine give decisive weight to punicky calls to quit the Guif.

American specialists, with Sandi and Kuwaiti help, tried to clear mines from the shipping channels before the arrival of the Kuwaiti tankers carrying new American flags. But it has not yet, and the usual pattern of each campaign is for the Iraqis to yield a few acres of ground in exchange for thousands of Iranian dead. Moreover, the legislature elected in May is about to convene, and this will enforce a shift in the center of political gravity from the executive toward an institution reflecting different personalities, regions and interest groups. The easy clarity of the Marcos-Aquino transition will be blurred.

Yet the stage the Philippines is entering is no less vital than was its passage to democracy. The central issue is agrarian reform. This goes far beyond tending to inequities in an almost feudal pattern of land ownership. It means reducing rural poverty, using development resources properly, increasing productivity and, meanwhile, blunting the appeal of a Communist insurgency. The View From Latin America

OLIVER North was certainly right on one point. America's enemies and O allies, its friends and neighbors have all been watching the congressional hearings on the Iran-contra affair. What they are seeing, at least as viewed from Latin America, is not a happy sight.

For those on the left it confirms the worst suspicions about the United States: Its talk about democracy and the rule of law is simply a cover for anticommunist, interventionist aggression. For the pragmatic center it is a new chapter in the process inaugurated by the Vietnam War and furthered by Watergate, whereby the icons of American mythology - accountability, the rule of law, congressional oversight — have been progressively crumbling. For the pro-American right, it has made life exceedingly uncomfortable.

Many Latin Americans remember when anti-communism was a noble end that justified all means imaginable - and some that were unimaginable. The time was the 1960s and '70s; the places were Chile, Brazil. Argentina, Uruguay. Central America. Now, instead of an Argentine or Chilean general proudly justifying the "dirty war" against "subversion," we hear senior Resean adminis tration officials unabashedly saying that they lied, misled Congress and kept the president in the dark about illegal acts, all in the name of the struggle against communism in our hemisphere." And they are applanded for it.

What an ironic and sorry state of affairs. Jarge G. Castaneda, a professor of political science at the National Autonomous University of Mexico, writing in the Los Angeles Times.

the showing. With the collection, Lacroix paid homage to the Camargue region of southern France and his native city of Arles. The backdrop for the show featured a poetic re-creation of the Camargue marshlands. Amid that design, Lacroix brought onstage three young women who were presented as the queen of Arles and her two attendants. (In the local pageant, the queen of Arles is chosen not on the basis of her beauty, but as a member of an old and distinguished family.) In what quickly emerged as the newest and most important fashionsilhouette, all three of the young women wore antique Ariesienne dresses in pastel serins, with criss-crossed shawl collars of old lace. Their hair was heavily codfed:

Although Lacroix has switched from strong colors to subdued ones, he also produced purple, red and green as a counterpoint. A hot-pink coat with yellow lining, which resembled a builfighter's cape, was a knock-out.

Despite the frivolousness of this collection, there was a serious, religious overtone as the models were big gold crosses on black ribbon, and demure, pushed-up chignons circled by black satin.

High points included a short mink coat with honey-colored satin sleeves; quilted suits made of Provençal cotton; a short, black-lace Marie Antoinette-inspired dress; and a three-color satin dress, imished with a witty pink satin bow in the back.

Details included black velvet chenille braid, with which Lacroix circled a white short coat. The same chenille, but in hot pink and red, also appeared on a long moire skirt under a lavishly embroidered bull-fighter's bolero. Jewelry was made of gold-painted clay and included drop earrings shaped as hearts.

Except for one really mad hat —

two doves sitting on their nest atop a black velvet platter hat - Lacroix was quieter in this department than usual. At the second showing, lost between Paloma Picasso and Pierre Berge - Yves Saint Laurent's business partner who sponsored in croix's entrance to the Chambre Syndicale - was Lacroix's mother, who was seeing his collection for the first time. She seemed totally unimpressed by all the commotion. Asked how she felt about her son, she said: "As usual, I think he has a lot of talent but that he's still very simple." Impressed? "You know," she said, shrugging her shoulders, "I'm from Arles." New Congress in Manila Signals a Shift of Power ferred stock into debt securities having a finite life. Perpetuals, as the word indicates. are never repaid. Principal on the new securities would be repaid in 28 years. In addition, for investors, the transformation would change the status of the perpetuals from primary capital notes to ordinary securities. Perpetuals were issued almost exclusively by banks that wanted to increase their capital but were unwilling or unable

In all but name, the perpetual FRNs were shares: There is no obligation for the issuer to redeem the paper, and the floatingrate interest under certain circumstances may be omitted.

Perpetuals came into vogue in 1984, despite a reminder by the Bank of England that any bank in its jurisdiction holding such paper would have to reduce its own capital by an equal amount. Its aim was to prevent a pyramiding — a nominal increase in the issuing banks' capital without any real increase in the capital available to the banking system to meet unexpected emergencies.

EVERTHELESS, perpetuals were popular. Some $18 billion was sold, largely to banks in Japan, thanks to the fact that the interest — the margin over the London interbank offered rate, or Libor — was higher than on ordinary FRNs that had a fixed redemption date.

That popularity evaporated late last year. The Bank of England and the U.S. Federal Reserve began discussing harmonizing definitions of what constitutes bank capital and how to measure whether it was adequate. Their agreement has not yet been formalized as they seek to establish rules that are acceptable to other national supervisory authorities.

But the attempt to establish common rules provoked fears that the Bank of Japan would adopt the Bank of England's policy of "shaving" of capital for banks bolding other banks' capital notes. That led to heavy selling of perpetuals, a sudden awareness that they are fundamentally different from standard FRNs and a collapse in prices. Most market-makers withdrew from the business, destroying the liquidity of that sector of the market. The Schroder proposal directly addresses the reserve requirements aspect. The securities to be issued in exchange for the perpetual FRNs would not be considered primary capital notes and could carry a capital weighting of between 2 and 10 percent from the Bank of England, instead of 100 percent. A 10 percent weighting is expected. This is significant for Japanese banks that fear similar capital ratio rules will emerge in Tokyo. The Schroder proposal could be especially appealing if they calculate that the cost to sell their perpetuals to the new special-purpose company, Security Investment Holdings, is less than the cost of raising new capital and reserving 100 percent against their existing holdings of perpetuals.

Schroder is initially seeking up to $1 billion nominal amount of perpetuals in exchange for FRNs and shares issued by SIH.

The perpetuals would be exchanged for 28-year floating-rate notes paying 30 basis points, or 0.30 percent, over Libor.

ple-A. They The new floaters would be rated secured by zero-coupon bonds of the U.S. Treasury or the World Bank which, after 28 years, would generate the income to redeem the FRNs. The interest payments on the new FRNs would be financed by the income earned on the perpetuals. In addition, an insurance company, Financial Security Assurance, would provide a guarantee on the payment of interest. Along with the FRNs issued by SIH, institutions agreeing to the swap would also receive shares in SIH. That company will continue to own the perpetuals after its own 28-year FRN has been redeemed. The continuing income generated by the perpetuals would then be paid to the shareholders as dividends, or the shareholders could decide to sell the company (to an insurance

Africans Seek Talks On Debt

Say West Callous About Burden Of $200 Billion

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia -African foreign ministers have called for an international conference to discuss the continent's $200 billion foreign debt, according to sources at their meeting here.

The ministers, preparing for a summit meeting of the Organiza-tion of African Unity in Addis Ababa this week on Friday instructed the OAU secretarial, the UN Economic Commission for Africa and the African Development Bank to set up such a conference as

The ministers also said African countries should spend no more than 20 percent of export earnings on debt service. Africa as a whole paid creditors $19 billion in 1986, about 42 percent of the $44 billion the continent earned from exports. The ministers dropped plans to ask their creditors to waive all the debt by converting it into grants.

The foreign ministers expressed disappointment over what they termed a lack of concern shown by Western industrial countries about Africa's debt, the sources said.

Still, creditor governments in the so-called Paris Club have recently granted rescheduling of official debt on very favorable terms to Zaire, Uganda, Mauritania and Mozambique, under an easier po-licy toward the poorest states.

The African ministers decided the debt conference should also discuss such issues as the collapse of commodity prices, the deterio-rating terms of trade of African countries and protectionism in the

from the terms. Paper that is tendered draws only 93 percent of its face value in FRNs issued by Security Investment Holdings. Thus $1 million nominal amount of perpetuals is to be exchanged for $930,000 of SIH paper. The remaining $70,000 is exchanged for 50 nonvoting B

In addition, institutions participating in the swap must put up a cash supplement. The amount varies according to which paper is tendered and is set daily in relation to the price currently posted in the

The cash supplement on the initial price list var-ied from a low of 13.99 percent of the amount tendered, for perpetuals issued by Barclays Bank PLC and National Westminster Bank PLC, to 21.76 percent, for those issued by Bank of Ireland.

On Monday, international companies were unable to profit from the unward trend on Wall Street or from the gains posted by the dollar, and they retreated further on Tuesday.

Royal Dutch was the only exception. Oil prices rose, driving up the price of Royal Dutch stock from 289 gmilders to 290.30.

On Wednesday, prices were initially stable, but crumbled later. After an uneveniful Thursday, internationals dropped again slightly Fri-day, except Philips, which rose to 55.70, ahead of expected good results.

growth figures. London

After the previous week's record gains on the London Stock Exchange, shares suffered heavy profit-taking last week, aggravated by concern about the inflationary consequences of a credit boom and by Tokyo's initial weakness.

The Financial Times 30-share index suffered its biggest one-day fall on Wednesday, after the release of figures that showed an unexpected U.K. current account deficit in May. Despite a partial recovery helped by a record rebound in Tokyo, the index closed down 71.9 points on the week, at 1,845.0.

Gilts retreated sharply, as the rise in bank leading figures for June prompted wornes about base rates.

Consumer stocks, insurances, chemicals and oil shares were generally easier. Lloyds Bank and Midland Bank both retreated after halfyear figures.

Political uncertainty weighed heavily on Miian stocks last week, triggering a decline in local share value that all but wiped out a modest gain the previous week.

The Stock Exchange Index, which gained 1.9 percent the previous week, lost 1.57 percent, to close at 691 points. Trade was also disappointingly low, with 121.6 million shares changing hands, against 119 million the previous we for a value of 639 billion lire, down from 676 billion.

The appointment of a youthful Christian Democrat, Giovanni Goria, to head the government caused a short burst of optimism the previous week, but gloom descended last week amid reports that he had failed to get agree. ment between the coalition parties.

Dealers said the political crisis would remain the determining factor in the market this week; and they were unwilling to predict a firm trend.

Paris End-of-month liquidation on the Paris Bourse helped local stocks to remain buoyant last week, after an early downward movement.
The CAC index closed Friday at 414 points, just up from 413.8 the previous week.

Trading was slack Monday and Tuesday as big institutional perchasers remained on the sidelines, noting a lack of interest among foreign investors and developments in the Gulf. Buying returned on Wednesday, and activity picked up sharply Taursday and Friday as dealers settled their monthly accounts.

Companies that were most in demand were tires group Michelin, electronics groups Thom-son-CSF and Télémécanique, and the Schocider engineering and electronics group.

Tokyo The Tokyo stock exchange rebounded with a record single-session advance last week, but many analysts said the market was still adjust-21.48 on the previous week.

The Nikkei had suffered major falls Monday and Wednesday as individual investors dumped their holdings, while institutional buyers remained on the sidelines. Friday's rise was caused by individual and

Polydynamic John Goelet, A Man of Solutions

By Mary Blume International Herold Tribune

S ANDRICOURT, France — John Goelet has the mellow accents and smooth mien of Old New York (Goelets have lived there since 1676 and the Goelet Estate still owns some of the city's choicer chunks). His travels make Henry Kissinger look as if he had never left his hammock, and his interests suggest that Goelet could fit under almost any word in the dictionary beginning with poly.

Polylingual and polydynamic will definitely do, as will polylogy or much speak-ing. Metaphorically, he is polycarpus (bearing fruit several times) and polychrest (adapted to several uses). He is certainly polygonal, or many-sided, but emphatically not polygamous, having been married to the same attractive wife for more than 30 years. His conversation changes direction in mid-sentence so that he is in effect enthusiastically talking of at least two subjects at once, which means that in minutes he can range over early Persian miniatures, Chilean rieslings, paleography, hydroponics, and the breeding of clams, cattles, lobster and corn, which he does in France, Britain, Spain and the Middle East, respectively (he also produces strawberries from tissue cultures in Nepal and owns vineyards in California, Australia and New Zea-

As he talks, he goes in and out of his library, which has oak panels from the old Goelet steam yacht Nahma, to letch something else to show the visitor who is already holding a bound manuscript, the Liber Ruralium Commodorum, from the library of Pope Pius VI, the paw of Goelet's friendly black labrador, a set of posters of imaginary and sardonic wine ceremonies of the world that Goelet commissioned from the artist Ronald Searle to use in lieu of advertisements for his wines, and an article by Goelet's oldest son called "Tracking the Flow of Learned Information from Membrane Receptors to Genome." "I have very little sense of time," says Goelet, reappearing with a fine flower reproduction by a Dijon printer he is helping out. "Time sort of flows." He sleeps three hours a night and had just visited a dam on the Tigris or Euphrates and friends in Provence. The next morning at 5 A.M. he would drive to London to drop off a car he had bought in Denmark before going on to Honduras where he is testing a strain of tropical corn for possible use in Angola or Mozambique. The first Monday and Tuesday of every month he is in New York.

For the moment Goelet, 56, has lighted briefly at Sandricourt, a château with 10,000 acres of grounds some 45 minutes north of Paris that his family bought for shooting in 1903 and that was twice occupied by Hermann Göring in World War II (the family chef, who had gone off in a huff to work briefly for the Kaiser, used to wear his German medals while he cooked, intimidating Göring's men into

There used to be vineyards at Sandri-court and one day Goelet will replant. "Until the Hundred Years War this was the biggest wine-producing area in Goeler's mother was a Guestier, one of the leading wine families of Bordeaux, but Goelet was not interested in making Bordeaux wines. "Bordeaux is too selfsatisfied and more interested in real estate than wine-making," he says. Some years ago he visited a California cousin. "We opened a bottle which had an enormous mustroom coming out of it and no label. It turned out it was a California wine. It was delicious. I said to myself, why waste my time being the last kid on the block in Bordeaux. Lets make a good wine in California."

In 1972 he started his Clos du Val Wine Co. Ltd. in Napa Valley, having hired Bernard Portet, the very young son of the technical director of Château Lafite, as his aide. In 1986, at a New York blind tasting organized by Steven Spurrier, the Clos du Val '72 beat a Montrose, a Léoville-Las-Cases and a Mouton Rothschild. The Bordelais were not amused.

"The tasting did not cause us any great friendships," Goelet says evenly. He is for blind tastings—"they take the stuffing out of a lot of people who are pompous"—but says they have their limits. He once correctly identified a wine he had never tasted, simply by educated guesswork, while another time, because he was in a bad mood, he missed the wine grown next to his Taltarni vineyards in Taltarni, which Ronald Searle calls Kangaronge, is steadily improving. Goelet says. A Bordeaux cousin even presented a bottle to the owner of Petrus - to what effect Goelet does not know. "The first Taltarnis were too strong - you could almost walk on the waters with them," he says. Goelet's older brother, Robert, is an ornithologist, expert on bird fleas and head of New York's Museum of Natural History. Another brother, Frank, is interested in early American music and has his own record company. The three brothers tend to keep quiet about their philanthropies and achievements. "None of us asks what the others do," John says. He thinks his success as an untrained winegrower and seedsman is the result of applied enthusiasm: "If you want to do something and you decide in your own mind what you want, specifically if you don't know much about it, it makes it much easier.

"I would never become an expert. I think the closest I came to becoming an expert is when I was interested in paleography at Harvard. I was very interested in early texts and I was doing it myself because there is no one else to tell you what is going on in front of you. I'm too old to become a scientist, there are very capable people who can be given a the hand. When Goelet went into the seed business, for example, he decided that rather than sell corn to the American midwest he would aim for the Middle East where they need it more and where he feels quite at home, having studied Arabic at the school of Oriental languages in Paris. He helped a farmhand from Sandricourt do plant research at the University of Cairo and, against all advice, set up tissue culture laboratories in
